The number of older Japanese who have no close friends is more than double the number in the United States, Germany or Sweden, according to a Japanese government survey.

In the survey conducted by the Cabinet Office, 31.3% of Japanese respondents said they do not have any close friends (1) their families, compared to 14.2% among U.S. respondents, 13.5% among those from Germany and 9.9% among those from Sweden.

The survey, (2) in December to January, (3) 5,000 elderly people in the four countries, including 1,367 respondents in Japan.

The results suggest Japan's elderly people (4) to have few relationships outside the family.

Only 26% of the Japanese respondents communicated via email or phone, the (5) among respondents in the four countries, compared to 59% for the respondents in the United States.

Eric Carle, the beloved children's book writer and illustrator, died. His most famous book, The Very Hungry Caterpillar about a caterpillar that ate different things each day and turned into a butterfly has been translated into at least 66 languages, including Japanese.

It's a reminder of how easily many books for kids (1) the world. Libraries and homes (2) Japan have Japanese-language editions of Italian American illustrator Leo Lionni's Swimmy, about the importance of facing challenges together, and Beatrix Potter's stories of Peter Rabbit and his friends in the English countryside.

Some English books don't always (3) well in Japanese: Dr. Seuss's books are great fun in English because of the nonsense rhymes, but they are hard to translate. Still, you can find Japanese versions of some Dr. Seuss classics, like Horton Hears a Who.

But the translations have gone the other way, too, with a flood of popular Japanese books for toddlers getting translated into English. These include: the Guri and Gura series of books by Rieko Nakagawa and her sister Yuriko Yamawaki, about two mice who love to cook; It Might Be an Apple, a wonderful story by Shinsuke Yoshitake for budding creative types that looks at how you can use imagination to make the world seem exciting; and of course, we can't (4) out Taro Gomi's Everyone Poops, a fun book that helps kids with their toilet training.

Reading translations of children's books is a great way to taste different cultures. It's interesting that only 3% of books in the U.S. are translations—it might help explain why so many Americans aren't (5) about the world. Bedtime stories are a first step to understanding, and translated books help little minds learn about other countries.

Rice is So Hot Right Now

By Jane Gold

January 21—Australia is a new market for rice cookers and leading Japanese and Chinese brands are now competing for market domination. In recent years, rice has become more and more popular with Australian families — so much so that many are purchasing rice cookers for their home kitchens. In the past, rice was eaten so rarely that most people just cooked it in a saucepan. The job of cleaning the cookware afterward was probably one of the contributing factors to rice's lack of popularity.

Two brands which are doing particularly well are Wakita and Langsho. At present, the Japanese brand, Wakita's sales are out in front. This is largely because of their reputation for durability. Nevertheless, Langsho's excellent features and attractive design make it a worthy competitor. This week, both Wakita and Langsho will be among the brands giving demonstrations at the Brisbane Cooking Exposition at the Peterson Convention Centre. Admission is free, so why not check them out?

9. Where would the article most likely appear?
 - (A) In an academic journal
 - (B) In a local newspaper
 - (C) In a sales brochure
 - (D) In a textbook
10. What is the Wakita brand known for?
 - (A) Durability
 - (B) Affordability
 - (C) Extra features
 - (D) Attractive design
11. What is indicated about the cooking exposition?
 - (A) It is being held for the first time.
 - (B) Famous chefs will compete in a contest.
 - (C) There is no charge for entry.
 - (D) Cleaning techniques will be demonstrated.

Exciting New TV Game Show Needs Contestants

Nicklemark Media is about to start shooting its latest game show, "The Knockout." It is an amazing new concept that combines challenges of both physical ability and general knowledge to discover the most well-rounded contestant. It is this production company's most ambitious project to date.

We are accepting applications from people interested in appearing on the program. The winner receives a prize of 20 thousand dollars in cash.

People who have participated in game shows which were only televised outside Australia may apply. People who have appeared on previous Australian television game shows may apply unless they reached the final stage of a program broadcast in the last 12 months. No one who has ever held a position with Nicklemark Media will be considered under any circumstances.

12. What is the purpose of the announcement?
- (A) To hire filming crew
 - (B) To publicize a trade show
 - (C) To conduct a survey
 - (D) To attract participants
13. What kind of business is Nicklemark Media?
- (A) An advertising agency
 - (B) A video game publisher
 - (C) A production company
 - (D) A marketing firm
14. According to the announcement, who is not eligible to apply?
- (A) Finalists in foreign television game shows
 - (B) People who have appeared on Australian television
 - (C) People who applied to Nicklemark Media's shows in the last year
 - (D) Former employees of Nicklemark Media

- David West [4:31 PM]: We have a shortlist of four items. Narrowing them down is proving difficult.
- Lana Toda [4:31 PM]: The ideas sound good, but the flavors aren't that popular with the focus groups.
- Nick Burns [4:33 PM]: That really isn't so important. It will only be on sale for a few weeks. It is just meant to be an exciting item that makes people talk about us.
- Kim Park [4:35 PM]: Yes, but we don't want negative publicity from any products that taste bad, right?
- David West [4:37 PM]: A lot of people liked the lasagna combined with a taco idea. It scored very high on taste.
- Nick Burns [4:40 PM]: That sounds good. But it isn't exciting. We need a really surprising combination.
- Lana Toda [4:44 PM]: In that case, the idea the diners we interviewed found most entertaining was called an ice-cream pie cake.
- Nick Burns [4:45 PM]: Wow. What's that?
- Kim Park [4:46 PM]: It's a dessert. It's a pie baked inside a cake that is covered in ice-cream. It is really hard to eat.
- Nick Burns [4:49 PM]: Sounds perfect! People will talk about it all the more. Make sure you send me a plan before the deadline. We need to get started on a campaign.

令和5年度 実務英語科一般入学試験 A 長文読解問題

次の英文を読み、a bullet train (新幹線)の開発にかかわったエンジニア中津英治が問題解決のヒントにしたことを160～200字の日本語でまとめなさい。

Eiji Nakatsu was an engineer who was working to improve a bullet train in Japan. A bullet train is a train that travels incredibly fast. But Japan's bullet train design had a problem. The Japanese bullet train could travel at 200 miles per hour, but it created too much noise. For example, when it left a tunnel, the train would create a booming noise because it would make direct impact with the air outside the tunnel.

To solve this problem, Nakatsu turned to nature. After all, he was not just an engineer. He was a birdwatcher, too! As a birdwatcher, he had observed kingfisher birds* with fascination. Kingfisher birds must efficiently fly into water to catch food. The kingfisher's beak allows it to enter into the water without feeling a great deal of impact. The kingfisher does not hit the water directly. Instead, it glides through the water, because its beak is shaped in a way that lets water flow past it. Nakatsu also observed owls. The owl fascinated Nakatsu because it is able to travel silently. Owls' feathers have tiny little cuts. These minimize the noise made by an owl's wings while it is flying.

Nakatsu realized that these two birds held the answers for Japan's bullet train problem. Nakatsu saw that the kingfisher birds could travel from air to water effortlessly*, so he decided to mimic their beak shape. The beak shape became the inspiration for the front of the bullet train. In order to minimize the train's noise, Nakatsu decided to replace the pantograph*. This is the device that brings electricity to the train. Nakatsu decided to mimic owl feathers by making small cuts in the pantograph. Because of these changes, the Japanese bullet train is now much quieter and faster than it once was.

For thousands of years, human beings have been able to write down words using such things as pens and brushes. But it was only about 500 years ago that the modern method of printing was invented. This method brought together techniques that had existed even earlier. For example, as early as 1041, people in China had used type* made of clay for printing. However, this printing technique did not have much (1) at the time. Probably the main reason was that the large number of characters used in written Chinese made it a difficult and time-consuming process to produce and use the type for printing.

In Europe, by contrast, books were copied by hand until the early 15th century. This took a long time, and only a small number of copies could be produced. A growing demand for education, and thus for more books, meant that many different people were looking for ways to produce books more cheaply. Probably the first person to (2) in doing this was Johannes Gutenberg, a German craftsman who began printing books in the 1450s. Perhaps the most important (3) that Gutenberg made was to develop a cheap way of making metal type of the letters of the alphabet. His new method rapidly spread to other European countries, and the history of modern printing began.

(4) these early books were still quite expensive for people at the time, they were much cheaper than books copied by hand. They were also much more accurate. The rapid spread of printed books beginning from this time had an enormous influence on all aspects of European culture, including science, history, and literature. Indeed, it is (5) to imagine the modern world without printed books.

E-Mail Message
From:	Rush Stolico
To:	All Printing Staff
Subject:	Adam O'Rihe
Date:	7 June

Dear All,

A recent story in the news about the movie star Adam O'Rihe's love of Amaze Comics has resulted in a massive boost to sales. He mentioned having seen a live action version of our comic, Clever Joe, on television as a child and said he started buying the comics shortly after. Orders for the original comics are coming in every day, and we're going to have to triple our current printing volume. We realize that staff are already working extremely hard, meeting quite challenging production targets. So, we would like to avoid scheduling any additional overtime work. To that end, we have decided to hire additional staff. If you know of any suitable people who are looking for work, by all means have them contact Connie Tran in the human resources department.

Volare Italian Restaurants
8388 Branson Road, Collingwood BC 78662

July 5

Candice Orta
23 Jameson Drive
Collingwood BC 78214

Dear Ms. Orta:

Thank you for coming in for an interview for a position at the Collingwood Volare Italian Restaurant. During the tour of the restaurant on July 2, I was very impressed with your observations and made up my mind to offer you the position. It seems, however, that I allowed you to leave without exchanging a number of important documents.

If you are still interested in the head chef position, I would like you to start work as soon as possible. I need your food health and safety certificate issued by the Collingwood City Council and your chef's license. I have enclosed with this letter a copy of the employee registration form that I need you to fill out and submit before you can start work.

I will not be back in Collingwood until July 15, so please call my personal assistant, Darcy Baker, if you need any additional information. If we do not hear back from you by July 12, I will be forced to offer the position to one of the other candidates.

Sincerely,

Eric Wallace
Human Resources Manager — Volare Italian Restaurants

- (D) Human resources manager

14. What is stated about the restaurant?

- (A) It is hiring staff at its multiple locations.
- (B) It has been in operation for a long time.
- (C) It offers a generous employee benefits package.
- (D) It interviewed several applicants for a position.

E-Mail Message
From:	Drake Traute
To:	Employees of Carlisle Software
Date:	Friday, June 9
Subject:	Three-day retreat

You should have noticed on the schedule that employees of Carlisle Software attend a three-day retreat every year, where we focus on our goals and get to know each other better. The results appear to be excellent. Our in-house surveys show that we have vastly improved efficiency and employee morale since we started the practice five years ago.

The dates have been posted on the schedule since February, and attendance is mandatory. I'd like you all to prepare for the retreat by helping compile a list of discussion topics. People at every level of the company should feel free to mention any topic they are concerned about. All you have to do is send me an e-mail with the subject line, Retreat Topics.

—[1]—. You'll have to make your own way to Sunny Bay, so don't forget to submit a reimbursement form by the end of the month. I encourage you all to carpool. —[2]—. Nevertheless, there are various other modes of transportation available including an hourly bus service from Fremont with a stop right in front of the Baywater Palms Resort. —[3]—.

Whichever of these means you choose, please be sure to be on time and prepared. —[4]—.

Sincerely,

Drake Traute

McQueen Bros has been in the classic and vintage car restoration business for more than 40 years. We have a highly trained team of mechanics and upholsterers who can return virtually any vehicle to its former glory, no matter how neglected it has become.

Last year we were recognized with a trophy from the Connecticut Better Business Bureau for our lasting success and our high customer satisfaction rating. This achievement can be attributed to our incredibly high standards and excellent staff training. Our professional restorers understand the need for authenticity and affordability and strive to achieve a perfect balance of both. We can pick up vehicles anywhere in the tri-state area and as far afield as Rhode Island although additional fees may apply depending on distance.

We are especially well known for our thoroughness when it comes to refinishing interiors. We source original fabrics and cushioning from trusted suppliers to ensure your treasured vehicle really does look like new.

To encourage the restoration of particularly old vehicles, we offer reduced rates on labor for pre-antique cars. Such cars are defined in the industry as being over 50 years old.

We are happy to help by carrying out an entire project or a specific job so give us a call at 555-2933 to arrange a free price estimate.

In old age, the human shrinks in overall size by 10 to 15 percent. In chimpanzees of equivalent age, the new study finds, no shrinkage occurs whatsoever. The findings suggest that the human life span isn't just an extended version of the life span of other mammals, said Chest Sherwood, a researcher at George Washington University. Instead, humans seem to experience old age in a unique way.

"The greatest point of deterioration*¹ that we found is in that part of the human life span which is beyond the life span of wild chimpanzees," Sherwood commented. "We think that the effect we have observed is the price of an increased life span." According to Sherwood, the findings could explain why humans are uniquely vulnerable*² to Alzheimer's and the other age-related brain diseases.

Sherwood and his colleagues compared magnetic resonance imaging (MRI)*³ scans of the brain of 87 humans, ages 28 to 88, with MRI scans of 69 chimpanzees from a research center in Atlanta. The chimps ranged from 10 to 45 years old. The researchers also examined the brains of deceased chimps as old as 51.

Focusing on the regions of the human brain most likely to shrink, the researchers found the expected loss of brain size with age in human volunteers. But the chimps' brains did not show any size change at all.

That's not to say that chimps' brains don't change with age, other studies show subtle structural changes in animals as they get older, but the direct comparison makes it clear that "whatever is going on is certainly more extreme in humans," Sherwood said.

Sherwood suspects that as natural selection began to favor the large human brain, humans had to deal with the resultant*⁴ problems, including relatively helpless infants and an extended childhood as that brain develops. In most mammals, females die once they can't reproduce anymore. But human women can expect to live 40 years past the age when they can bear children. This long life span may have evolved so that grandparents could help their own children with childrearing, thus ensuring that their grandchildren would survive to spread their genes. Humans have a longer life span than chimps and get to have grandma and grandpa around as nannies, but we pay the cost in reduced brain size.
